Rumor has it that the big fish, and her traveling companion, were seen roaming the halls of the public library ever since it was shuttered as a non-essential service during the pandemic. Apparently it's only a fish out of water that finds book-reading to be a bare necessity.

Sadly, brick-and-mortar libraries seem to on their way out. It's only a matter of time until every book is digitized, and then hard-copy books and brick-and-mortar libraries will become, as a front desk clerk in Jakarta once declared to me: "antique things". But until the last of the old-style libraries shuts its doors for good, the big fish and her traveling companion will find their way to these temples of knowledge and shall spawn in their hallowed halls.
