Markets

We live in an age of commerce where markets are to be found in all corners of the world. An infinite variety of goods changes hands in markets. But markets are also social institutions, where people gather for shopping, to have a quick bite or something to drink, and to pass a few moments chatting with friends and neighbors.

There is also a very special feeling that markets invoke. It's as if the circus has come to town. Crowds move from stall to stall; sellers cry out their bargains; orders are given; and all the while, cash and goods change hands. With just a glance, we know that the heart of the market is beating, and the town has sprung to life. Just as a quiet market seems sad, a lively one radiates excitement.

This series presents scenes from open air markets in Africa, Asia and Europe. All of these are special in their own unique way, but collectively they convey that sense of wonder and excitement---as if the carnival has just arrived.
